The Society of Captives

A Study of a Maximum Security Prison

By Gresham M. Sykes

What is it like to be in prison? How does it feel to live in a drab cell, rejected by the outside world? What kind of society exists within prison walls, and what makes for prison riots? These are the questions that form the core of this highly readable study of the maximum security prison in Trenton, New Jersey. The author lets prisoners and jailers alike speak for themselves to give a vivid picture of the prison as a social community and of the treatment accorded to imprisoned criminals in America today.
